

Cathy Qori

Reflection on HCIN 511 Evidence-Based Practice Project

Studying evidence-based nursing practice has been an eye-opening journey that has reinforced the pivotal link between theory and patient care. It's not merely about adopting the latest trends but understanding the significance of informed decision-making in healthcare. The value of evidence-based practice lies in its ability to bridge the gap between traditional wisdom and contemporary advancements. It empowers nurses to critically evaluate research findings, integrating them with their clinical expertise and the patient's preferences to deliver the most effective care possible. I've come to appreciate how evidence-based nursing practice serves as a compass, guiding us through the complexities of healthcare and steering us toward delivering compassionate, efficient, and quality-driven patient care.

I found using the John's Hopkins model for creating the project extremely helpful. I'm sure it's a tool I will continue to use. This class has reinforced the profound impact that a well-informed, evidence-based approach can have on the ever-evolving landscape of healthcare, making it an indispensable tool for any dedicated nurse.